

A quick but challenging 3 day trek near to Huaraz takes trekkers deep into the Quilcayhuanca valley, over a challenging pass to Cojup valley, and past glacier run-off lakes from the surrounding giants. A great acclimatization trek for those looking to take on longer treks or summit mountains.

Day 1: Huaraz - Quilcayhuanca - Tullpacocha

8:00 am. We will head east from Huaraz to arrive in Pitec (4 485 m), the entrance point of the Huascaran National Park. From here, we will arrive to the entrance of the Quilcayhuanca gorge, the starting point for our trek. At the entrance, we will be able to see cave paintings. We will begin our hike through the extensive Quilcayhuanca gorge, which is famous for the presence of the Andean Kings, the condors.

Throughout the hike we will take in beautiful panoramic views. After four hours, we will arrive at our campsite at Tullpacocha (4,300 m).

Dinner and overnight in Tullpacocha.

Day 2: Tullpacocha - Huapi Pass - Cojup

8:00 am. After breakfast we will set out for our second day of the trek. We will pass by the beautiful Cuchillacocha Lake (4,625 m), and advance towards Huapi Pass (5,020 m). We will have views of mountains such as Ranrapalca, Huapi, Ishinca, Andavite, Palcaraju, Cayesh, Maparaju, etc. After the pass, we will descend towards our camp in Cojup gorge.

Dinner and overnight in Cojup.

Day 3: Cojup - Huaraz

8:00 am. After breakfast, we will head out on our hike through the Cojup gorge, walking about 4 or 5 hours to reach Pitec. From here our transportation will await us to return us back to Huaraz.

